OBITUARIES

GERTRUDE FEINBERG SCHWARTZ

Overcame Old World misadventures to craft successful life in Pittsburgh

By Nate Guidry
Post-Gazette Staff Writer

Gertrude Feinberg Schwartz suffered a series of ordeals to get to America, but managed to arrive in Pittsburgh in the early 1920s with her pride and sense of humor intact.

"She was a strong woman, and one of the most resilient people I've ever known," said 67-year-old Paul Schwartz, the elder of Gertrude and Bernard Schwartz's two sons. "She never went to school, but she was smart and had a wonderful sense of humor."

Mrs. Schwartz, who died Thursday in the Charles Morris Center in Squirrel Hill at the age of 95, was born in Ukraine. Her father and two older brothers came to Pittsburgh 10 years before she, her mother and two more brothers arrived.

"The idea was for the father and older brothers to work, save money and send for the family," Schwartz said. "But they weren't able to accumulate enough money."

That changed when Mrs. Schwartz's oldest brother died of pneumonia, leaving a $1,000 life insurance policy. The money allowed the rest of the family to leave Ukraine.

They went by way of Poland. While shopping there, Mrs. Schwartz became separated from her mother. Later, she was arrested by police because she didn't have papers. She was detained for approximately three months.

Because it was easier to enter the United States from South America than from Eastern Europe, Mrs. Schwartz went to Argentina to be with an aunt who had left Ukraine years before. She stayed in Argentina two years.

In 1923, Mrs. Schwartz arrived in Pittsburgh and settled in the Hill District, which at that time was a center of Jewish culture. She went to work at Davidson's Grocery on Center Avenue, and in 1932 married Harry Schwartz, a truck driver for a Jewish bakery. Mrs. Schwartz had two sons, Paul and Bernard, with her husband in the 10 years they were married before his death.

"She kept her boys under her thumb," said Mrs. Schwartz's first cousin, Sara Gordon of Shadyside. "Those boys were always well-mannered and well-dressed."

Mrs. Schwartz was among the first tenants of Terrace Village, the country's second largest public housing project, dedicated in 1940 by President Franklin D. Roosevelt.

"She had a hard life, but no matter what, she was able to laugh at herself," Gordon said.

Mrs. Schwartz was buried Monday in Beth Abraham Cemetery in Carrick.

OTHER DEATHS

Al Tucker, 58, former Oklahoma Baptist University basketball star who played four years in the NBA, Monday in a hospital in Dayton, Ohio, of unknown causes. A 6-foot-8-inch forward, Mr. Tucker averaged 13.1 points for the Seattle SuperSonics in 1967-68, his first season in the pros. He was named to the NBA's all-rookie team. Mr. Tucker also played for the Cincinnati Royals, Chicago Bulls and Baltimore Bullets of the NBA, and the Floridians of the old American Basketball Association.

EDWARD I. SPROULL JR

Former V.P. of tax administration at PPG

By Frank Reeves
Post-Gazette Staff Writer

Edward I. Sproull Jr., who retired as vice president of tax administration of PPG Industries in 1991, died Sunday at Sewickley Valley Hospital. He was 74.

The cause of death was heart failure, said his daughter, Nancy Means.

Mr. Sproull joined the giant glass and coatings company in 1969, first serving as director of tax administration until his election as vice president in 1975.

His tenure coincided with PPG's significant expansion outside of the United States and Canada. The company's growth overseas compelled Mr. Sproull and his staff to match the company's business needs with the tax structures of several countries.

"Whenever you have that kind of expansion, you must structure your acquisitions in the most tax-efficient manner," said Donna Walker, who was hired by Mr. Sproull in 1976 and succeeded him as vice president for tax administration upon his retirement.

Mr. Sproull was also an advocate for PPG's interests with lawmakers in Washington. In the mid-1980s, Congress changed the investment tax credit rules — legislation that would have increased PPG's tax liability. Working with the company's Washington lobbyists, Mr. Sproull was able to persuade members of Congress to include provisions in the legislation that specifically exempted three PPG projects from the new rules, Walker said.

Mr. Sproull was a protective mentor who encouraged her and other women to pursue a career in tax administration, Walker said, noting that many other executives were skeptical of the 1970s movement that saw renewed efforts by women to break into corporate America's "old boys network."

"He was ahead of his time," Walker said. "His daughter is about my age. I think he saw something of his daughter in me. He understood many women's desire to be recognized for their own contributions."

Mr. Sproull was born in Scarsdale, N.Y. During World War II, he was a seaman first class in the Navy, serving in the Pacific.

After graduating from Yale with a degree in industrial administration, he worked for 14 years at Olin Mathieson in New York, where he became director of taxes. Between 1964 and 1969, he held the same post at Commercial Credit Co., a Baltimore firm.

Mr. Sproull was a member of the Advisory Council of the Tax Foundation, the Financial Executives Institute, and the National Association of Manufacturers. He was a member of the board of directors of the Tax Council and the board of trustees of the International Fiscal Association's U.S. Branch, and a member of the Tax Executives Institute.

In addition to his daughter, Mr. Sproull is survived by his wife, Norma, of Sewickley; a son, Edward III, of Westfield, N.J.; a brother, Robert, of Tequesta, Fla.; and five grandchildren.

Visitation will be from 5 to 8 p.m. today at the home of John and Nancy Means, Pink House Road, Sewickley. Burial will be private.

Memorial contributions may be made to the Sewickley Academy Endowment Fund, Academy Avenue, Sewickley 15143.

KEN HUGHES

His best known film was one he didn't really like

By Jon Thurber
Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — Ken Hughes, a veteran screenwriter and director probably best known for the popular children's movie "Chitty Chitty Bang Bang," has died. He was 79.

In failing health for some time, Mr. Hughes died April 28 at a nursing home in Los Angeles.

Born in Liverpool, England, he set his sights early on a movie career, winning an amateur film contest at the age of 14. A few years later, he began making documentaries and short features, including a series of well-received movies for the British Broadcasting Corp. : "AKA Scotland Yard."

Those films led to well-received features such as "Joe MacBeth," Mr. Hughes' gangster variation of the Shakespeare saga, starring Paul Douglas and Ruth Roman, and "The Small World of Sammy Lee," starring Anthony Newley as a small-time con man and gambler.

Released in 1968, "Chitty Chitty Bang Bang" was loosely based on the novel by Ian Fleming. It was the story of an eccentric inventor, played by Dick Van Dyke, and his magical automobile. Although critics gave the film mixed reviews, audiences loved it, and it became a family favorite. But, according to Mr. Hughes, it was not his favorite.

"The film made a lot of money, but that doesn't really make me feel any better about it," he once said. "On the other hand, I've made pictures that got awards at Berlin and places and didn't make any money, and that doesn't make me feel any better either."

Mr. Hughes' favorite film, the one on which he said he made no concessions, was 1960's "The Trials of Oscar Wilde," starring Peter Finch. It told the story of Wilde's libel suit against the Marquis of Queensberry and the tragic turn Wilde's life took because of it.

Mr. Hughes, who wrote the script for "Wilde," made a version of "Of Human Bondage," with Kim Novak and Laurence Harvey. He was one of five directors to work on the James Bond spoof "Casino Royale," which got poor reviews despite its cast of David Niven, Woody Allen, Peter O'Toole and Orson Welles.

He had better success with the 1970 film "Cromwell," with Richard Harris as Cromwell and Alec Guinness as King Charles I.
